AWS MARKETPLACE GTM

SESSION 5 · DRIVE DEMAND

The listing doesn't sell itself.

A storefront generates nothing on its own. Today we build the 4-week demand engine that drives the right buyers to it — and we draft week one live.

1:1 GTM Coaching · Ron Davis · From listed to bought.

One sentence the whole campaign defends.

Before channels or content, we lock the thesis — the single claim every piece of the campaign proves.

No thesis, no through-line; just noise.

For [your ICP], we deliver [the outcome], proven by [the proof].

// the discipline

Every post, asset, and email this month exists to make this one sentence believable.

We write yours live, then judge every idea against it: does this prove the thesis, or just fill the calendar?

Where your buyer actually pays attention.

You don't need every channel — you need the one or two where your ICP already spends attention. We pick by where they are, not where it's easy to post.

// find them

Where they gather

The feed, newsletter, community, or search surface your specific buyer checks on a workday.

// match the mode

How they consume

Skim a post, read a teardown, watch a demo?
The format follows the buyer, not your preference.

// concentrate

Go deep, not wide

One channel done consistently beats five done occasionally. We pick the smallest set that works.

Four weeks, one build to the buy.

The sequence escalates: earn attention, prove you're real, make the offer, then loop in AWS and retarget. Each week sets up the next.

Week 1: earn the attention.

Week 1 leads with a point of view your buyer can't scroll past — channel, asset, and hook chosen to start a conversation, not announce a product.

WEEK 1 CHOICE

Channel

Asset

Hook

// the test

If your POV could be your competitor's too, it's not a POV — it's a brochure.

Week 1 has to take a stance only you would take.

Week 2: make it undeniable.

Attention without proof evaporates. Week 2's job is one credible piece of evidence that turns "interesting" into "I should look at this."

// option

Named result

A specific, quantified outcome a real customer got — number and name, not "up to X%."

// option

Teardown

Show the work — a public breakdown that demonstrates the POV on a real example.

// option

Mini case

A before/after on one buyer's problem — small, concrete, repeatable to the next prospect.

// the rule

Proof is specific or it's nothing. Adjectives don't convert; evidence does.

Pick the one proof asset you can actually produce this week — shipped beats perfect.

Week 3: make the offer.

You've earned attention and proven you're real — now ask for the next step. One clear offer, matched to how ready your buyer is to commit.

OFFER	FOR THE BUYER WHO...	THE ASK
Demo	wants to see it work before committing time	"Book 30 minutes — I'll show you on your data."
Trial	learns by doing, low risk tolerance	"Start free — self-serve, no call needed."
Private offer	is ready and wants terms that fit	"Let's structure a private offer for your scale."

Week 4: multiply and re-touch.

The campaign doesn't end at the offer. Week 4 loops in the AWS field and re-touches everyone who engaged — and hands directly into session 6.

// multiply

Co-sell

Take the proof and the offer to your AWS account team — give the field a reason and a way to sell with you. Session 6 makes it repeatable.

// recover

Retarget

Re-touch everyone who engaged but didn't act. The second touch closes the buyers the first one warmed up.

Draft it live — credible voice, no hype.

We write three LinkedIn hooks and one email together, in a voice your buyer trusts. No “game-changing,” no “revolutionary” — just the POV, said plainly.

// hook 1 • the contrarian

“Everyone tells you to _____. Here's why that's costing you _____ — and what I'd do instead.”

// hook 2 • the result

“We helped [buyer] go from _____ to _____ in _____. The one change that did it:”

// hook 3 • the question

“If an AI agent shopped your category today, would it even find you? Most can't. Here's the test.”

// the email • ≤120 words

Context → the buyer's problem → the proof → one clear next step. Sent to the warm list from weeks 1–2.

Watch one number. Cut one.

Most campaigns drown in dashboards. We name the single metric that says it's working — and the vanity metric to stop watching.

// watch this

Listing → qualified lead rate

The number that ties the campaign to pipeline. If this moves, the engine works.

// cut this

Impressions / likes

Feels like progress, predicts nothing. Stop reporting it; it only flatters the calendar.

- ☐ Schedule all of week 1 — channel, asset, hook — in your scheduler. — the engine starts.
- ☐ Set up tracking for the one metric; stop reporting the vanity one. — measure what matters.
